

Humor 2-2026

Calling for information about one of his credit cards, a man got the following recorded prompt: “Please enter your account number as it appears on your credit card.”

The man did as instructed, and the system said, “Please enter your five-digit ZIP Code.”

After he put that in, he got a third message: “If you would like your information in English, press one.”

A woman was struggling to separate one shopping cart from another when a fellow customer came to the woman’s aid.

“It seems to be shopping cart mating season,” the woman joked.

“I certainly hope so” the fellow customer said, tugging on one.

“They never have enough carts at this store.”

Escape rooms were a popular craze in which participants solve puzzles and clues to free themselves from a locked room.

Many people find them fun, but not one burglar in Vancouver Washington.

He broke into an escape room after hours and became trapped.

He eventually figured out how to leave.

He called 911.

While prosecuting a robbery case, a prosecutor conducted an interview with the arresting officer.

The prosecutor’s first question: Did you see the defendant at the scene?”

“Yes, from a block away,” the officer answered.

“Was the area well lit?”

“No. It was pretty dark.”

Then how could you identify the defendant?” the prosecutor asked.

Looking at the prosecutor as if he was nuts, “I’d recognize my cousin anywhere.”

For Valentine's Day, a man decided to get his wife some beads for an abacus.

It's the little things that count.

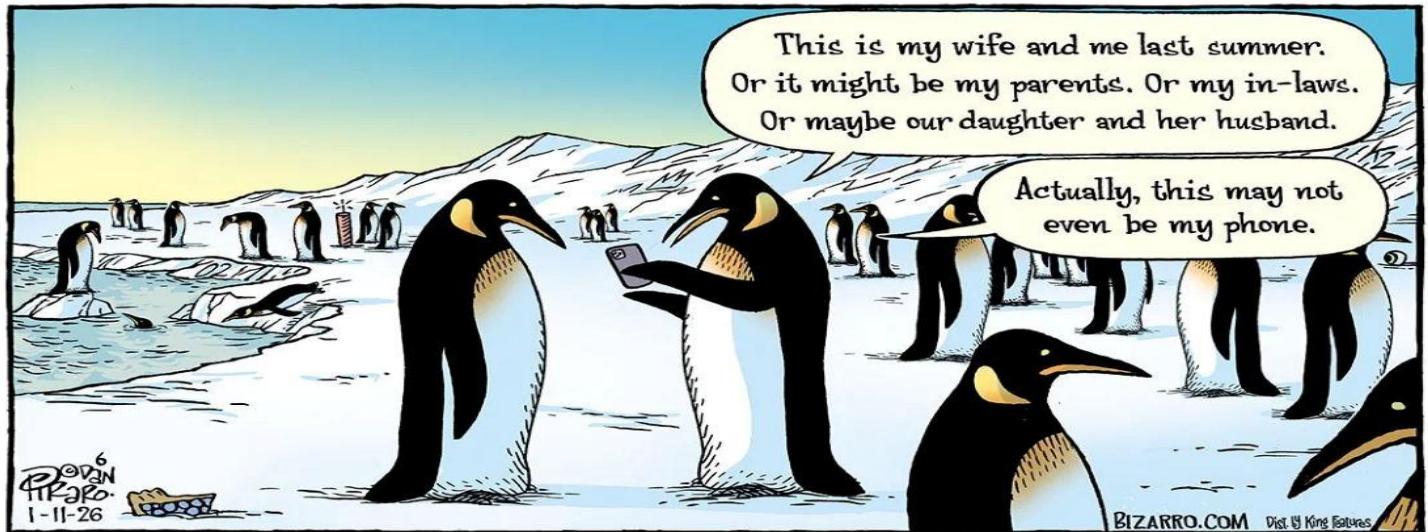

My kid wants to invent a pencil with an eraser on each end, but I just don't see the point.

Q: Which is faster, hot or cold?

A: Hot, because you can catch cold.

Q: Why couldn't the astronaut book a hotel on the moon?

A: Because it was full.

Bizarro_1-11-2026

While working on a new house one day, a man overheard two carpenters talking.

“Check it out,” one of them said, pointing to the leaden sky.

“Some ominous clouds are headed our way.”

“No way,” came the reply.

“Those are cumulus.”

A fellow was having computer problems at work, so he called the IT department.

A technician arrives and asks the man for his password.

“My password is MickeyMinnieGoofyPlutoHueyDeweyLouieDonald-Berlin,” the fellow replies.

“Why is it so long?” the technician asks.

“Because,” the man replies, “I was told it had to be eight characters and a capital.”

A book agent once called on president Lincoln and sought to sell him a book for which he had no use.

Failing, he asked Lincoln if he would not write an endorsement of the work, which would enable him to sell it to others.

Whereupon the President, always anxious to oblige, with a humor entirely his own, wrote: “Anyone who likes this kind of book will find it just the kind of book he likes.”

While searching for murder suspect Sterling F. Wolfname, cops in Billings, Montana, ran into someone at a shelter who matched his description.

When they asked him if he was Wolfname, the man said he wasn’t.

The officers concluded he was lying when they spotted this tattoo on his head: Wolfname.

A Ranger answers a lot of questions at the information desk at Olympic National Park, in Washington state.

But one visitor stumped him: “Do you have any trails that just go downhill?”

Last fall, a vacationer called to make a reservation at a campground. But first, she had a question: “Can you tell me what day the leaves turn color?”

During a stickup, a bank robber in Phoenix, Arizona, told a teller to hand over “all the twenties, forties, and sixties.”

It’s perfectly okay to talk to yourself and it’s perfectly okay to answer yourself.

But it’s totally sad that you have to repeat what you said because you weren’t listening.

The front office of a clothing store asked the employees to figure out the square footage dedicated to each department in the store.

To save time, one employee suggested they count the ceiling tiles above each department.

“They’re each two square feet.

Counting the tiles would give us an accurate dimension of each department without having to work around all the displays,” the employee explained.

The boss hated the idea.

“Hell-ooo,” the boss said, sarcastically.

“We need the square footage of the floor, not the ceiling.”

A person asked a man on a country road for directions to a friend’s house.

“Go straight up the road till you reach the place where the barn burned down,” he said.

“Make a right onto the dirt road till you see a shed with a dog out front, and then make another right and continue up a mile.”

“What if the dog isn’t out front:” the person asked.

Perplexed, the man said, “Make a right, anyway.”

A young man had ordered vanity plates to go with his very first car. But instead of getting a pair, as he expected, he thought he'd been sent a single plate.

But he forged proudly ahead with the plate installation, and when he finished, his father came outside and asked, "Why'd you put on only one?" "That's all the state sent me," the young man replied.

"Is that right?" His dad said with a grin.

Kneeling down, the father undid the screws, slid a fingernail along the edge of the plate, and popped off a second one.

The name on the personal plates?

"DITZ E 2."

The man sitting next to another man on a recent flight was terrified of planes; he couldn't stop shaking.

So the second man suggested the first man get a Scotch from the flight attendant, which he did, drinking it down in one gulp.

"Can I get another one?" he asked the second man.

The second man pointed out the button above the first man's head and told the him to press it if he wanted another drink.

The first man promptly stood up, pushed the button, and held his glass underneath it.

Q: What did one eye say to the other?

A: Between you and me, something smells.

There's a new type of broom out; it's sweeping the nation.

Q: Why do melons have weddings?

A: Because they cantaloupe.

Q: Why did Mozart sell his chickens?

A: Because they kept saying, “Bach, Bach, Bach.”

Bizarro 12-14-2025