

Humor_3-2026

A firefighter was speaking to a first grade class about fire safety. As an introduction to the concept of “stop, drop and roll,” he asked the children, “What would you do if your clothes were on fire?” One little boy said, “I wouldn’t put them on.”

These waiters couldn’t wait to sound off on some of their more memorable customers:

1. A guy pointed to the menu and asked, “These baby back ribs... are they fish ribs?”
2. A customer asked if their milk came from female cows.
3. “Crabs should taste like crabs, not shellfish.”
4. Watched a kid pump simple syrup into his hand thinking it was hand Sanitizer.
5. Had a guy who ordered eggs “sunny side down” and was very adamant about it.
6. “What’s the difference between duck and lamb?”

During a job interview, the hiring manager asked a man what his greatest weakness was.

The man panicked and blurted, “Doughnuts.”

The manager stared at the man.

The man stared at the manager.

Finally, the manager nodded and said, “Same.”

A man was having trouble with groundhogs digging up his flower garden. Not wanting to harm them, he went to the local hardware store and rented two live traps.

“What do I with the groundhogs after I catch them?” he asked.

The store owner said, “I tell everyone to take them west out of town until the road turns to gravel and let them go.”

The man was appalled: “That’s where I live!”

Q: Why can’t you ever run through a campsite?

A: You can only ran-it’s always past tents.

Q: How do you fix a broken tomato?

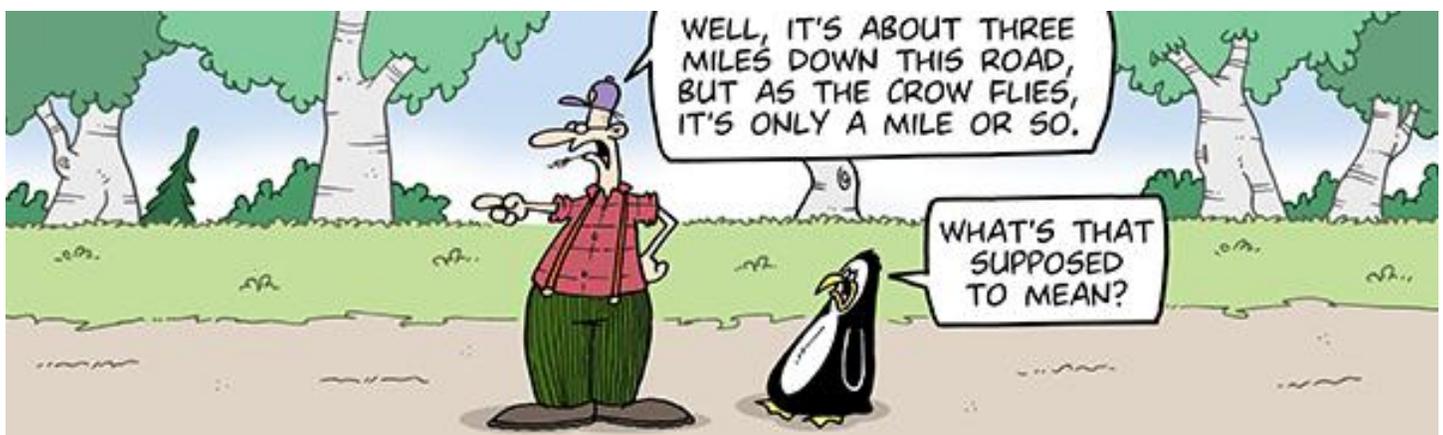

A: With a can of tomato paste.

Q: How do you deal with a fear of speed bumps?

A: You slowly get over it.

Q: How many apples grow on a tree?

A: All of them.

Tundra_6-11-2023

While leading a lunch-and-learn CPR training for a law firm, a man demonstrated chest compressions on their CPR dummy, which is just a head and chest with no arms and nothing below the chest.

Partway through the demo, a paralegal commented, “Your efforts are certainly admirable, but with most of his body gone, even if he were to survive, I think you have to ask, ‘What quality of life is he going to have?’”

An ABC liquor store in Ashland, Virginia, had a break-in early on Nov. 29, but it wasn't a robber.

The New York Times reported that a raccoon fell through the ceiling of the store, then set about trying a wide variety of alcohol: rum, moonshine, peanut butter whiskey, vodka and, of course, eggnog.

“It broke several bottles and consumed the spirits,” said Carol Mawyer, PR manager for Virginia ABC.

When police and animal control responded, the blotto beast was passed out face-down on the floor of the bathroom.

The raccoon woke up after about 1 1/2 hours and showed no signs of injury. It was released back into the wild.

Officers stopped a speeding car on Dec. 5 in Door County, Wisconsin, WBAY-TV reported.

The sheriff's office said the car was also missing a front headlight on the driver's side, but no worries: A handheld flashlight had been jerry-rigged in the spot where the headlight should have been.

“A flashlight is not a safe or legal replacement for proper headlights,” authorities said.

A man visited a monastery and as he walked past the kitchen he saw another man frying chips.

The 1st man asked the 2nd man, “

Are you the friar?”

The 2nd man replied, “No, I'm the chip monk...”

Q: Why can't your hand be 12 inches long?

A: Because then it would be a foot.

I gave all my dead batteries away today, free of charge.

A book just fell on my head.

I only have my shelf to blame.

Q: What do you need to make a small fortune on Wall Street?

A: A large fortune.

A Los Angeles man who thought he'd boarded a flight to Houston found out he was actually headed to Tokyo.

Victor Calderón, 54, donned his headphones when he sat down and didn't listen to the announcements.

After six hours, he asked a flight attendant why the three-hour United flight to Houston was taking so long and then he realized his mistake.

He turned around in Tokyo and arrived at his destination two days late.

The apologetic airline, which was investigating why his original boarding pass was accepted, gave him $1,000 in travel credits.

A woman in northern England was flummoxed when packages containing random consumer items began arriving at her house-until she realized she'd been online shopping in her sleep.

Nicola Edwards, 56, thought she was being pranked by her sister when she was delivered a dog wig, a book on guinea-pig care, ballet shoes, a diamond-tipped drill bit and dozens of other odd selections.

When her husband reported seeing her on her phone in the middle of the night, she figured out what was happening.

"I honestly thought I was suffering with dementia," she said.

A woman joined a new Weight Watchers group.

At the first session, the group leader explained the healthy-eating plans everyone should follow, including drinking six to eight glasses of water a day.

The following week, the leader asked how everyone was getting on.

One woman looked rather glum.

When the leader asked why, the woman replied, “Well, I’ve done my best to stick to the diet plan, but I’ve had real difficulty.

Try as I might, I just can’t drink 68 glasses of water a day.

All I can manage is 46.”

“Does anyone in this room need to be dismissed from jury duty?” a judge asked a roomful of prospective jurors.

A nervous young man stood up. “I’d like to be dismissed,” he said.

“And why is that?” the judge asked.

“My wife is about to conceive,” answered the man.

Slightly taken aback, the judge responded, “I believe, sir, you mean deliver. But either way, I agree. You should be there.”

Q: How do you make a waterbed bouncier?

A: Add spring water.

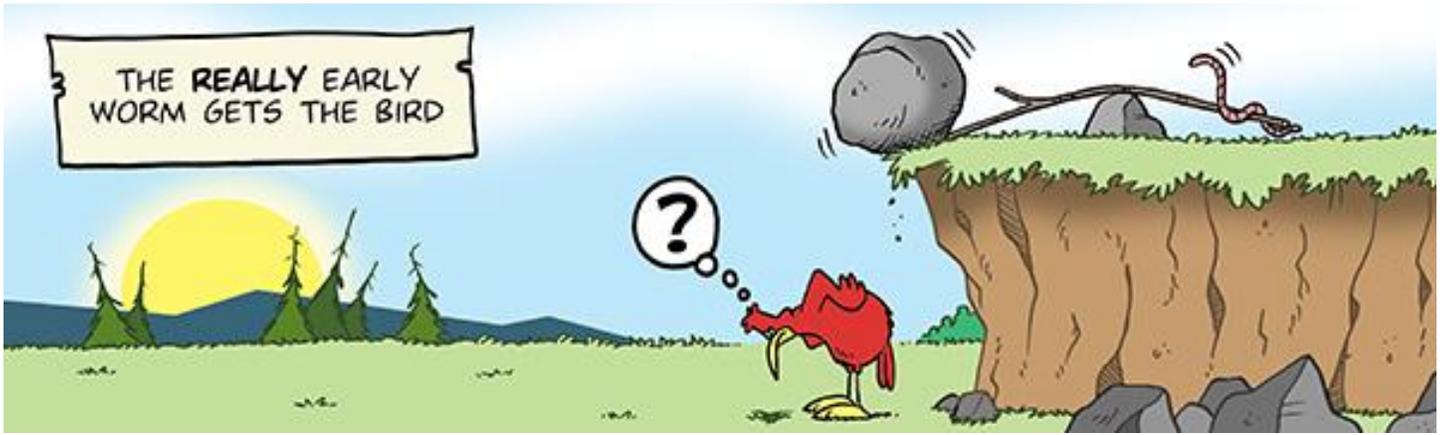

Q: What do you get from a pampered cow?

A: Spoiled milk.

Plateaus are the highest form of flattery.

Q: How can you tell when a bucket gets sick?

A: When it becomes a little pale.

Tundra_10-14-2023